As the obedient guests raised their wine-filled goblets to their powerful ruler (King Uther) there was an eerie silence around the great hall. Peasants glanced to each other in hope of answers. No-one moved. Suddenly, an almighty scream came from outside the impenetrable oak doors. The sound echoed around the room - bouncing from wall to wall - the noise magnified. In his domineering role, Uther ordered his knights to guard the doors; he knew there was evil on the outside. Efficiently and in unison, each man grasped their steel sword from its scabbard and held it high into the air. The once bustling hall, had transformed into a silent, tense prison.

Stealthily, a muscular figure entered the hall. He was glared at by every pair of eyes in the room. The warrior marched directly towards Arthur. Then ... he just stood. The tension in the air was thick and heavy. Suddenly, without warning, the mysterious intruder thrust his gauntlet at the prince. The churning feeling in his stomach filled him with anxiety, yet he was a knight of Camelot, therefore it was his duty to retrieve the glove and fight.

"Tell me your name!" demanded Arthur, "I deserve to know your name."

To the crowd's amazement, the figure began to reveal himself...
