Armour

The poor scavenger (who had been forced into the ring) powerfully raised the huge, grand flag before sprinting to the other side of the muddy pitch. Amazingly, that triggered the crowd into a brief silence, before the noise was about level with a thunder cloud at its mightiest. A mean glare was struck between the two knights. Then the everlasting galloping sound - over ruled by the enthusiastic roar of the deafening crowd - began. The clanging of the armour echoing with each hit was unable to silence the over excited, cheering audience. Immediately, a tall, chivalrous knight, Sir, charged and heaved his lance high.
